

CENTRAL TEXAS HOUSING MARKET REPORT

May 2019

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY | MAY 2019

The median price of a single-family home reached an all-time high of $407,400 in the city of Austin this May.

But at the same time, new and active listings declined in Austin, and home sales dropped 3.4%. The same wasn't true, however, for the surrounding areas, which all experienced strong gains.

"A lack of middle-market housing in the city of Austin is driving demand to the suburbs," Kevin P. Scanlan, 2019 president of the Austin Board of REALTORS®, said. "While the Central Texas housing market is healthy and thriving, Austin continues to struggle with housing options that are affordable for first-time homebuyers as the median price surpasses $400,000."

Such escalating prices have taken a toll on the Austin Independent School District, where the city's lack of affordable housing and the increase in multi-family developments "has negatively impacted the school district's projected growth," Reyne Telles, the district's executive director of communications and community engagement, said.

"As more families move outside the district's boundaries, we're taking the appropriate steps to mitigate this trend," he said. "In order to adapt to this new reality, and work towards increasing our student population, the school district now allows students who reside outside of AISD's boundaries to transfer into our schools."

In the Austin-Round Rock MSA, single-family home sales in May increased 6.2% year over year to 3,452 home sales as sales dollar volume experienced a double-digit percent increase of 14.8% to $1,468,980,773—the highest volume to date.
